

For some background info, this is my mum's artwork. I am very proud.

- Create container div with row inside.
- Two cols within row so that info will be displayed side by side. Tentatively col-8/col-4 in the bootstrap speak, bc left should be a little wider than right.
- Left col = img, text below img.
- Right col = price, artist info, additional text
- Should've laid out the elements within each col here, but instead got trapped in creating an img carousel >-<
- Now that the carousel is done...
- Lay out elements within each col (see drawing)
 - Col A:
 - Box A1: imgs
 - Box A2: img text
 - Col B:
 - Box B1:
 - Box B2: price
 - Box B3: artist info
 - Box B4:
- For the text under the image (A2), I just copied the text from my mum's page about the pieces.
- Don't know what to put in B1 or B4 yet, so starting with B2, B3.
- B2 super quick and easy. Price and two buttons. The guide has three little gray boxes under the buttons. I had no idea what to put here. They look like social media icons, but if that were the case, wouldn't they be closer to the artist info?
- B3 very straight forward as well. That's my mum.
- B1 is the series name and the name of a random art gallery in Austin + filler text.
- I had no idea what sort of information to put in the dropdowns of B4. I went with It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia quotes.
- Looking back on the guide, I now wonder if I should've structured it with two rows, with A2, B3, & B4 in the second row, so that A2 & B3 are on equally horizontally.
- Now that I've had some time away from the project, I realise that I do need to restructure it into two rows. I wouldn't typically label things in this way (alpha-numeric) bc it obviously causes problems when you have to change things. The reason I've done it now is simply so that I can more easily describe them here.
- It is now structured as follows:
 - Col A:
 - A1 - imgs
 - Col B:
 - B1 - name/loc of pieces
 - B2 - prices
 - Col C:
 - A2 - about the art
 - Col D:

- B3 - about the artist
- B4 - quotes
- I should have organised the photos into various folders.
- Grabbed the font y'all use 'poppins' font from Google and applied it to the whole page.
- Took a screen shot of the page for the Artscapy logo.
- I CANNOT figure out how to get the 'log in' button to sit just left of the 'sign up for free button'. I used dev tools to look at how y'all have it styled, but I still just could not figure it out.

Ok, I think I'm done. I'm happy with it, insofar as it is what was asked, but I'm not particularly fond. Overall, I had a lot of fun, really. You might find my notes a bit lacking or difficult to follow. Bc of my ADHD, when I'm "in the zone", it's really hard for me to break out of it without also losing steam. If you have any questions, please feel free to reach out!